

Disclosure Statement for Jonathan Huntley
Can Tax Rebates Stimulate Consumption Spending in a Life-Cycle Model?

The author declares that he has no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper.

This work was done while the author was employed by the Congressional Budget Office.

Neither the author nor the author's spouse have received any additional support that is in any way related to this work. Neither the author nor the author's spouse hold any paid or unpaid positions as officer, director, or board member of relevant non-profit organizations or profit-making entities. The Congressional Budget Office has the right to review this work before it is submitted to a journal.

Sincerely,
Jonathan Huntley

Disclosure Statement for Valentina Michelangeli
Can Tax Rebates Stimulate Consumption Spending in a Life-Cycle Model?

The author declares that she has no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper.

This work was done while the author was employed first by the Congressional Budget Office and then by the Bank of Italy. The author acknowledges the funding of the Bank of Italy research fellowship.

Neither the author nor the author's spouse have received any additional support that is in any way related to this work. Neither the author nor the author's spouse hold any paid or unpaid positions as officer, director, or board member of relevant non-profit organizations or profit-making entities. The Congressional Budget Office or the Bank of Italy has the right to review this work before it is submitted to a journal.

Sincerely,
Valentina Michelangeli