While economists recommend using market incentives, regulation is widespread to achieve agricultural and environmental resource management objectives. This pre-conference workshop aims to understand this reality better using multiple vantage points, including political economy, irreversibility, and supply chain perspectives. With these perspectives in mind, the workshop will overview the policy choices of environmental and agricultural policies in the US, followed by a roundtable and a public discussion.

The Macroeconomics of Market Power

Roger Solinari

Saturday, Jan. 7, 2023

- 9:00 AM - 10:00 AM

New Orleans Marriott, Bourbon Room

Hosted by: Society for Economic Dynamics

Chair: Maria R. Nazeri, University of New York

JEL Classifications

- C7 - Consumption, Savings, Investment, Labor Markets, and Social Security
- E6 - Macroeconomics and Monetary Economics

Abstract

The paper explores the impact of market power on macroeconomic outcomes, focusing on the role of monopolistic competition in shaping economic cycles. The author develops a model that explicitly incorporates the strategic interaction between firms and consumers, leading to the emergence of cycles that are qualitatively different from those in traditional macroeconomic models. The analysis highlights the importance of understanding the role of market power in shaping aggregate outcomes.

Chair: Lucy Finkelstein, U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics

JEL Classifications

- C8 - Consumption, Saving, Production, Investment, Labor Markets, and External Economy
- E2 - Consumption, Savings, Production, Investment, Labor Markets, and External Economy

Abstract

The paper examines the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on hours worked and labor productivity in the United States, using data from the Current Population Survey. The analysis reveals that the pandemic led to a significant decline in hours worked, particularly among low-wage workers, and that productivity was likely to be permanently affected.

Presenters:
- Jonathan D. Hall, University of Toronto
- Marco Gonzalez-Navarro, University of California-Berkeley
- Harrison Wheeler, University of California-Berkeley
- Rik Williams, Uber Technologies, Inc.

Abstract: This paper investigates the impact of light rail transit expansions on the demand for other transportation modes, notably ride-hailing services like Uber. Using a large panel of cities, the study employs a difference-in-differences approach to compare changes in Uber usage before and after light rail transit expansions. The results suggest that light rail expansions are associated with a decrease in Uber usage, indicating a substitution effect where residents opt for the new public transit option. The analysis also considers whether the effects vary by city characteristics, such as population density and unemployment rates. This research contributes to the broader debate on the role of public transportation in reducing car usage and improving urban mobility.

Abstract: This session introduces the concept of integrating environmental and social justice perspectives into the economics curriculum. The panelists discuss the challenges and opportunities in teaching students about the interconnections between economic policies and their environmental and social impacts. The speakers highlight the importance of incorporating real-world examples and case studies that illustrate the complexities of sustainable development and social equity. The session aims to inspire educators to adopt innovative teaching methods that empower students to become informed and active participants in shaping a more sustainable future.
