Manuscript: “Theory and Measurement of Common Ownership”

Author Christopher Conlon

We have not received any funding for this paper.

We have received funding for a related project reviewing the literature around common ownership from the Brookings Institution.

We also have an ongoing consulting relationship with the Federal Trade Commission with regards to issues surrounding common ownership.

That relationship is primarily organized around two things: (a) we are providing ongoing access and occasional support to our (publicly available) cleaned database of 13f filings and (b) we have produced some additional tables and figures by request related to the submitted paper. The likely output is some contribution to policy whitepapers by the FTC and potential rulemaking down the road. We do not have any interest in any ongoing litigation around this issue.
