

Nicholas Bloom disclosure statement for “The Evolution of Working from Home.”

Research support for this was provided by:

The Templeton World Charity Foundation

Smith Richardson Foundation

The University of Chicago

ITAM (A Mexican University)

Stanford HAI (a research center)

MIT Mobility Initiative

Toulouse Network for Information Technology

Upjohn Institute

Kauffman Foundation

(this is also all detailed here on our website: <https://wfhresearch.com/funding-partners/>)

I have given paid speaking over the last 3 years paying $10,000 or greater on the current and future of working from home to the following organizations:

Mayer Brown (Law Firm)

National Confectionary Association

Coideation (Danish and Swedish firm advising technology firms)

Henkel (German chemical company)

Turing (IT company)

Okta (IT company)

Asana (IT company)

Google Japan (IT company)

Beacon property (Real-estate company)

G100 (Manager forum)

Carlyle (Private Equity Firm)

Ernst and Young (Accounting Firm)

Ingram Micro (Computer Firm)

Citibank (Bank)

BCA (Canadian Bank)

Poly (IT equipment firm)

Grainger Industrial Supply (Industrial Company)

PayCom (Payments firm)

PagerDuty (IT firm)

Service Now (IT firm)

Gaurdant (Healthcare firm)

No other party has a right to review this paper prior to its circulation.

May 11, 2023