Re: The Effect of Public Insurance Coverage for Childless Adults on Labor Supply

As indicated in the acknowledgement footnote to the paper, this work was supported by grants from the UC Davis Poverty Center and the W.E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research. We obtained IRB approval through the University of Wisconsin (SE-2012-0154). As part of our data-sharing agreement, the State of Wisconsin through the Institute for Research on Poverty must review the paper prior to dissemination for possible data disclosure issues. The State has no authority, however, to influence the reporting of our findings or shape our conclusions.

In the past three years, Leininger has received financial support via contract research vehicles from the State of Wisconsin Department of Health Services, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS), and the Medicaid and CHIP Payment and Access Commission (MACPAC).
