Re: The Effect of Public Insurance Coverage for Childless Adults on Labor Supply

As indicated in the acknowledgement footnote to the paper, this work was supported by grants from the UC Davis Poverty Center and the W.E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research. We obtained IRB approval through the University of Wisconsin (SE-2012-0154). As part of our data-sharing agreement, the State of Wisconsin through the Institute for Research on Poverty must review the paper prior to dissemination for possible data disclosure issues. The State has no authority, however, to influence the reporting of our findings or shape our conclusions.

After the paper was completed, but at the time the paper was submitted and during the time it was under review and revised, DeLeire was Senior Advisor in the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Planning and Evaluation at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. ASPE and HHS did not review or comment on the paper.
