Challenges
- A broad range of topics can be covered, need to narrow focus
- Student knowledge and familiarity with economic reasoning prior to the course
- Outdated current events, public policies and topics in textbooks
- Cross-disciplinary nature of the course
- Keep an environment conducive to openness and respect of various views and opinions while discussing controversial issues such as the minimum wage, poverty, inequality, healthcare, etc.
- Able to foment spirited discussion, but fell behind schedule
- Identifying pedagogies to encourage student participation and debate

Advice
- Promote course prior to student registration
- Encourage both majors and non-majors in economics to enroll in the course
- Identify topics that are interesting to a wide range of majors such as business, political science, social entrepreneurship, international relations
- Pre-screen and select videos
- Schedule guest speakers in advance
- Include interactive learning activities
- Provide course resources that reflect differing views
- Encourage persuasive writing and Letter to the Editor submissions
