Date: July 31, 2019

Author Name: Giancarlo Corsetti

Manuscript Title: Liquidity and Consumption: Evidence from three post-earthquakes reconstruction programs in Italy

Disclosure Statement:

I declare that I have no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper.

Full disclosure: Financial support for my general research activities, including the research on the submitted article, was provided by the Keynes Fellowship at Cambridge University and by the Cambridge INET institute. This financial support is explicitly acknowledged in the first footnote of the paper.

In the past years, I have received consultant fees and visiting professor scholarship income from the Bank of England, the European Central Bank, the Bank of International Settlement. As an expert witness, I participated in a trial over a series of interest rate swap the financial crisis inked before the Global Financial Crisis, on behalf of Portuguese State-owned public transportation companies, contracted by the Law firm Lipmann-Karas.

Sincerely
